COURSE ABSTRACT

In the late 20th and 21st centuries, all domestic legal fields, as well as the fields of international law have been reshaped to some degree by developments in the transnational legal sector. In this course, we examine the effects of transnationalism on traditional areas of domestic law (such as administrative, environmental and labor law) as well as on public and private international law. Some of these effects are found wholly within domestic institutions; other examples involve various gray zones blurring the traditional boundaries of international and domestic law; still others involve law making outside and in the shadow of the state – such as best practice standards in the areas of corporate governance; we also take into account human rights in state and non-state frameworks. The core conceptual contention of transnational law as a field of study is that many of the legislative, adjudicatory and judicial structures pertaining to global capitalism and other aspects of globalization escape the traditional binary categories of public/private, international/domestic and state /market. In practical terms, then, transnational law expands the arenas for addressing legal problems, and enriches our analytical skills for doing so.

The materials in this course will consist of the final draft of a new casebook by Professors Alfred Aman and Carol Greenhouse, Transnational Law: Cases and Problems in an Interconnected World. It will soon be published by Carolina Academic Press.

These materials will focus on the transnational dimensions of a number of important domestic and international law cases, emphasizing the various interrelationships between and among international and domestic law as well as private ordering. We shall focus in particular on environmental, trade and labor issues.
